

Regina Polak

Regina Polak, born in 1967, is Associate Professor for Practical Theology at the Catholic Faculty of the University of Vienna. She studied Catholic theology, philosophy and spiritual theology in the interreligious process in Vienna and Salzburg. She is the leader of the network Religion in the Context of Migration and member of the research platform Religion and Transformation in Contemporary Society. She has taught at the University of Szeged (Hungary), the Jagellonian University in Krakau (Poland), the University of Haifa (Israel) and given lectures at St. John's University in New York and Stanford University (USA). Her research foci are religion and migration, transformation of religion in Europe, transformation of the Catholic Church, value research.